A New Cakrasaṃvara Text in Uighur

Abdurishid Yakup

0. Introduction

Facsimiles of 323 texts including 246 Dunhuang manuscripts and 77 supplementary texts preserved in Peking University Library were published under the title 北京大学图书馆所藏敦煌文献 Bei-jing Da-xue suo-cang Dun-huang wen-xian ‘Dunhuang Documents Collected in the Peking University Library’ as an independent volume of the series 敦煌吐鲁番文献集成 Dun-huang Tu-lu-fan wen-xian ji-cheng ‘The Corpus of Dunhuang-Turfan Manuscripts’ which have been published by Shanghai Classics Publishing House. All of these texts are in Chinese with the exception of 36 : Khotanese (1), Tangut (6), Tibetan (10) and Uighur (19)¹.

As far as we know, among these Uighur texts only one alliterative poetry is secular and is identified as the praise of Mongolian ruler Sulayman wang who was appointed to Xining wang in 1330², the rest are all of Buddhist content. Among them there are two fragments of Altun Yaruq (北大附 T3, 北大附 T3V)³, two Agāma texts (北大附 C61, 北大附 C61V and 北大附 C57, 北大附 C57V)⁴ and two Tantric (北大附 T1, 北大附 T1V and 北大附 C60) as well as two śāstras (北大 D012, 北大 D012V and 北大附 C58) and one alliterative Buddhist poetry (北大附 C29V)⁵. One of the two Uighur Tantric fragments, which was included in this facsimile edition under the signature 北大附 T1, is the subject of this paper. My understanding is that 北大 Beida is the shortened form for 北京大学 Bei-jing Da-xue ‘Beijing University’, and 附 Fu is the abbreviation for 附錄 fu-lu ‘supplementary’, and T stands for 吐鲁番文献 Tu-lu-fan wen-xian ‘Turfan manuscripts’⁶.

¹For further information concerning this facsimile edition and other related publications see FacsimileBeida (Explanatory Notes), volume 1, pp.1-2, Explanatory Records (附錄) pp. 1-48; Yakup 1999, pp. 1-2.

² cf. Yakup 1999, pp. 3-4.

⁴北大附 C61 is the fragment of Madhyamāgama and 北大附 C57 is the fragment of Samyuktāgama. For detailed information see Shōgaito 1999, p. 93 footnote 1.

⁵ For the edition of this fragment see Yakup 1999. The rest of the Uighur fragments are of Buddhist content, including 北大 D159V which was issued under the title “Uighur text”.

⁶ cf. FacsimileBeida (Explanatory Notes), volume 1, p. 1. In the following lines we will mention this text as Beida

1. Characteristics and the Content

From the facsimile of this text and the description found in the facsimile edition we found that this fragment consists of 46 lines: 23 lines both on recto and verso (definitely, it includes one line pagination on verso)⁷. The script used in this fragment is the late-square type of Uighur script which was used in some late Uighur Buddhist texts. According to the description given in this facsimile edition, the size of this fragment is 16 cm (h) x 41.7 cm (w). The paper is double-layer pasted, and bears red lines both on the upper and lower sides. The height at the paper's center (卷心 juan-xin) is 11.3 cm, the deep margin at the top (天頭 tian-tou) is 2.4 cm, the deep margin at the bottom (地脚 di-jiao) is 2.3 cm. Only two lines are in red color, the rest are written in black ink⁸. This fragment was unearthed from Turfan and originally used to be preserved under the number 232/4012.

This text was issued under the title 佛經 fo-jing 'Buddhist sūtra' in the facsimile edition and the description found in the facsimile edition does not provide further details concerning the content of this fragment. Based on the details of this text we can immediately relate it with the Buddhist Tantric texts that involve the Cakrasaṃvara cycle of teachings and put particular emphasis on the practice of yoga or mahāmūdra 'Great Seal' (Tib. phyag rgya chen mo). This school of Tibetan Tantric Buddhism is connected with the Indian Siddha Nāropa (1016-1100) which was developed by his student Chos kyi blo of Mar (1012-1096), better known as Mar pa, and occupies a unique position in the history of Tibetan Buddhism⁹. Such Tibetan texts were introduced and translated during the Yuan-Mongolian period into Mongolian due to the special kind of links between the court of Yuan dynasty and Tibet¹⁰, and some of them were also translated or incorporated into Uighur, e.g. Bar do thos grol 'The Tibetan Book of the Dead', some parts of chos drug 'Six Doctrines' of Nāropa, as well as some other fragmentary texts¹¹. It does not need to stress that such Uighur texts appeared under the strong influence of Tibetan Buddhism, and most of the Uighur Tantric texts are translations from Tibetan, in fact some of them are almost identical with the Chinese parallels, too. However, most Uighur Tantric texts are not completely identical with the texts in other languages. Supposedly our fragment also goes back to a Tibetan text or at least is based on a Tibetan original. Unfortunately we were not able to identify it with any Tibetan text if a parallel version exists.

T 1. For the facsimile of this text see FacsimileBeida vol.2, p. 299.

⁷ In the facsimile edition it was described as one side 24 lines and other side 25 lines. cf. FacsimileBeida vol.2, p. 35b.

⁸ FacsimileBeida vol.2, p. 35b.

¹¹ Mainly cf. Kara/Zieme 1976, Kara/Zieme 1977 (text A) and Zieme/Kara 1979.

The very early edition of some block print Tantric fragments was published by F.W. K. Müller in his fundamental work *Uigurica II*¹². Some texts were also edited by W. Radloff, R. R. Arat, S. E. Malov, K. Röhrborn, M. Shōgaito, Geng Shimin, J. Hamilton, Oda Juten and by other scholars¹³. However, the majority of Uighur Tantric texts were edited by G. Kara and P. Zieme in BT VII, BT VIII and in Totenbuch, respectively. A new text of Uighur Tantric Buddhism was published by M. _lmez very recently¹⁴.

2. Dating

In the facsimile edition this text is considered as the manuscript of Tang period (唐写 Tang-xie), dating between the middle of 8th century and the beginning of 9th century¹⁵. The evidence of such dating is not clear to us. It is well known that Uighurs came into contact with Tibetans in 8-9th centuries. However, no Uighur Buddhist text appears under this cultural contact is known from this period so far. Even an Uighur text in Tibetan script (signature number: P. t. 1292) which is of early period of Uighur Buddhism dates from the first half or the middle of the 10th century¹⁶. The content of our fragment also denies its 8-9th centuries dating since it comprises Cakrasaṃvara cycle of teachings which is the religious theory and practice of Sa-skyapa and numerous sections of Bka'-rgyudpas¹⁷. As we have stated above it was based on the teachings of Mahāguru Nāropa who was a famous teacher of Tibetan Lamaism and his teachings were developed by his pupils between 11th and 13th century¹⁸. Tibetan texts that involve such theory and practice were introduced and translated into Uighur mainly during the Yuan-Mongol period by the Lamaistic section of Uighur Buddhism¹⁹. Besides the content of this text, the type of the script (late square) and the spelling peculiarities (frequent confusion of d/t and s/z) of this fragment also tell us that this fragment is also of the 13th or 14th century like other Uighur Tantric texts. This text may date back to the first half of 14th century, when Nāropa's teachings and many other Tantric texts were introduced to Uighurs.

¹² U II, pp. 27-50; Facsimiles SEDTF Vol. IV, plates 9-34. Later Müller also published a Lamaistic ritual in the Uighur script. cf. SPAW 1928, pp. 379-386.

¹³ A survey of these editions was given in BT VII pp.5, 14-15; Elverskog 1997, pp. 105-125.

¹⁴ cf. Bahşi _gdisi, pp. 261-293 + 3 plates.

¹⁶ For edition and studies of this text mainly cf. Maue/Röhrborn 1984 (Teil I), Moriyasu 1985, Maue/Röhrborn 1985 (Teil II). Such dating was suggested in Moriyasu 1985.

4. Explanations

4. [bīš]iŷ bīšyut: This appears in Totenbuch 1221 and 1240. *bīš*iŷ 'ripe, mature; ripeness, maturity' (EDPT p. 378b) comes from bīš- 'to come to maturity, ripen' (EDPT p. 376b) and bīšyut perhaps derives from bīš- 'to come to maturity, ripen' + -yut (Zieme/Kara 1979 pp. 177-178 note 1221), most probably also belongs to deverbal nominals derived with -(U)t (OTWF pp. 313-314). The whole phrase translated as "herangereift" in Zieme/Kara 1979 and as "quite matured" in OTWF p. 313. Supposedly this phrase signifies "skillfulness in a practice" when it was in the abstract use, e.g. in our context, since in modern Uighur both piš- and *pišši*q often connect with "fluency, skillfulness in a training or craftsmanship", e.g. u yayaččiliqqā pišti 'he was mastered in wood-work', and *u xānzučīya pišši*q 'he is fluent in Chinese'.

7. *tägingülüg ašayulu*ŷ: tägin- and aša- are twin words and both correspond to Chin. 受 shou 'to receive', Skt. vedanā (cf. ShogKenkyu II p. 31, UW p. 241a, Kudara-Zieme 1988 p. 190a, ShogAbhi. II 350a).

11-12. yügarüki ät'öz: yügarüki derives from yügarü 'present' + -ki, yügarüki ät'öz corresponds to Chin. 現身 xian-shen 'the present body', skt. nirmāṇa (cf. Nakamura p. 338a, SH p. 359b).

16. tuuy pra: This phrase consists of tuuy ‘standard (‘alam)’ (DLT p. 498) and pra <Sogd. pr’’ (??) <Pkt. paḍāā (~paḍāga) : Skt. paṭāka, paṭākā ‘banner’ (BSHD p. 316a). tuuy corresponds to Chin. 幢 chuang ‘pennant, streamer, flag, sign’ (SH p. 431b), and pra corresponds to Chin. 幡 fan ‘a flag, banner’ (SH p. 431b). For further explanation see Zieme/Kudara 1985, pp. 151-152 note 142.

These words appear in the same form in Suv. 176: 20, but as tuy-lar pra-lar or tuuy-lar pra-lar in most Uighur texts, e.g. Suv. 81:8, Xuanzang V 13: 16, V 47: 7, VI 2 9, VI 5: 6-9 (In Xuanzang V, VI pra was given as bra in all places) and MaitriH 3446. In Suv. pra also appears together with kušatre as pra kušatre (342:5, 361: 16, 477: 11, 525: 5, 575: 1) or pra kušatre-lar (Suv. 487: 12). For further notes on its attestation in the Uighur texts see Tezcan 1975, p. 84 note 95; Zieme/Kudara 1985, pp. 151-152 note 142.

17. kuž-atri: <Toch. B kuśa(t)re <Skt. kṣattra (Tezcan 1975, p. 85, note 95). It corresponds to Chin. 蓋 gai ‘a cover, anything that screens, hides, or hinders ...’ (SH p. 428a). This word appears in the same form in Xuanzang VI 5: 7-8 and in MaitriH 3446, but as kušatre or kušatri in most Uighur texts. For further explanations see Zieme/Kudara 1985, pp. 151-152 note 142. However, in our context it seems to refer to a music instrument.

tīy: <Chin. 笛 di, Middle Chin. diek ‘horizontal flute’, it appears in BT III pp. 963, 989 and ShogDKPAM p. 1349. For detailed explanations see ShogDKPAM pp. 161-162 note 10.

18. tūš āt’ōz: This can be translated as “fruit-body” literally. This phrase appears six times in Totenbuch: ll. 169, 292, 291, 901, 944, 969 and several times in Altun Yaruq: 43/20, 22, 45/17, etc. As a Buddhist term tūš āt’ōz corresponds to Skt. sambhogakāya (= Tib. lons-sku) and Chin. 報身 bao-shen ‘the reward-fruit’ or ‘consequences of past deeds’ (cf. Kara/Zieme 1976, note A 340-344; Nakamura p. 1142a,b; SH p. 369b).

23. qaršī iš küdüg: ‘opposite affairs’ (Hend.) or ‘erroneous affairs’ (Hend.). It supposedly corresponds to Chin. 違逆惡事 wei-nie e-ji ‘erroneous evil matter’ (= Skt. vipratipati, Nakamura p. 43a).

32. keruka: <Skt. Heruka ‘name of Gaṇeśa ...’ (MW p. 1305b).

Abstract

In this paper the text edition of the Uighur fragment (signature number: 北大附 T1) from Peking University Library was provided. It was originally published in facsimile in 北京大学图书馆所藏敦煌文献 Bei-jing Da-xue suo-cang Dun-huang wen-xian ‘Dunhuang Documents Collected in the Peking University Library’, the independent volume of the series 敦煌吐鲁番文献集成 Dun-huang Tu-lu-fan wen-xian ji-cheng ‘The Corpus of Dunhuang-Turfan Manuscripts’ which have been published by Shanghai Classics Publishing House.

This text is of Tantric content and it involves the Cakrasaṃvara cycle of teachings and reflects practice of yoga or mahāmūdra ‘Great Seal’ like some other Uighur Tantric texts.

In the facsimile edition this text is considered as the manuscript of Tang period, dating between the middle of 8th century and the beginning of 9th century. The content of this text, the type of the script and the spelling peculiarities of this fragment tell us that this fragment is also of the 13th or 14th century like other Uighur Tantric texts. Most possibly it may dates back to the first half of 14th century, when Nāropa’s teachings and many other Tantric texts were introduced to Uighurs.
